Dude seriously? YOU.....people like you are the reason why steam sucks so much. either put effort into a game your selling for profit or dont even try. for sake this is just the unity asset flip everybody talks about. you proud of your 99 cents? what a lame excuse.. A long way from the worst GameGuru game I've ever played...but that really ain't sayin' much.

About the only thing that sets this one apart is the small degree of eeriness that is actually achieved, mostly due to a modicum of effort put into the sound design. Most GG games just use the effects that the pre-made assets come with - which are appallingly mediocre, at best - while this dev decided to make his own atmos by farting down a microphone, taunting his dog, stepping on his cat's tail repeatedly...that kind of thing. Before promptly turning the volume of each effect up to a volume obnoxious enough to give you a bona fide FRIGHT whenever one kicks in. I mean, it's "jump scare" strategising at its very worst, but still a darn sight better than what we've come to expect from games made with this engine.

Unfortunately, no other kindness can be said about this product. The story is non-existent, the gameplay clumsy, and the graphics predictably crap (GameGuru comes with an absolute tonne of trees, yet this game uses a fistful at best). I guess it is a smidgen longer than the average GG effort: about fifteen to thirty minutes total, depending on how lost you get and if you actually bother to stop and shoot anything. Whether this is a good or bad thing is up to personal interpretation, of course, as I've frankly been thankful for the brevity of most GG product to date.

And alright, I guess it's kinda cheap...though not nearly cheap enough. Devs like this should pay us to playtest their hastily whipped-up demos and offer our invaluable advice. My feedback to this particular dev? Hey, at least this is a darn sight better than Station 228, the earlier effort of yours that I've been subjected to. Keep improving, and with a little luck your fourteenth GameGuru release might be remotely playable.

There's hope here, to be sure, but it's a distant glimmer at best.

Verdict: 3/10.
